Half-way through its term in office, the European Commission is falling behind in the race to create sustainable long-term prosperity in Europe. Faced with the breakdown of an economic system based on short-term gain, the Commission's attitude to the environment has continued to favour short-term fixes over long-term benefits.

Europe's leading environmental groups have issued a critical assessment of the Commission's performance in nine EU policy fields with impacts on the environment, reviewing the track record of 13 European Commissioners and Commission President José Manuel Barroso.
